

Guiding Principles of the Program

- The safety of victims and their children is our top priority. We recognize that often victims must leave their relationships in order to be safe, and we support their decisions.
- Education emphasizing accepting personal responsibility for one's actions and choices does work.
- By helping victims and the men and women who are the aggressors change their thinking and behaviors, we help create safe relationships.
- The hidden victims of domestic violence, the children, deserve society's best efforts to intervene and stop the violence that disrupts their families.
